- Double yellow lines outside and across the driveway at “St Joseph’s” on Friars Walk (near the barbers) – to prevent cars blocking the drive
- Double yellow lines from the parking line across the driveway at “Marina” on Hartland’s Avenue – to allow the owners to park their cars inside and prevent parked cars on the road from obstructing access and egress
- Double yellow lines on a 1m stretch at the junction of Mount St Joseph’s Avenue (off Magazine Road) and the rear of Horgan’s Buildings – to allow cars and emergency vehicles to turn the corner
- Double yellow lines along both sides of Lough Hill from the Lough to Lough Villas – the current lines are almost invisible
- The white stop line on the western side of Tower Street by the stop sign at one of the most dangerous junctions in the city – a paltry effort was done along a minute stretch and the line is not visible enough and will potentially lead to accidents

The Republican plot in St Finbarr's holds the graves of 3 men born outside of Ireland: Joe Murphy (USA), Seán Phelan (Liverpool), and McKenzie Kennedy (Scotland).

It would be fitting to choose McKenzie Kennedys centenary anniversary as a time to mark this international element.

In addition, "Scotties" story contains many elements, strands, and narratives of that period.

He was born and raised in Inverness-shire in the Scottish Highlands. His father and uncle were both members of the British Army and his brother died in France during World War 1. Keen to avoid this fate for Ian his mother took him to Ireland to avoid conscription. He fell in love with the language, music and culture of the Nation and joined the struggle for freedom.

The Commemoration would provide an opportunity for Cork to potentially expand and build links with Scotland, Liverpool and Massachusetts (USA), through potential initiatives, invitations and friendship building.

In addition, it would provide a fitting tribute to 3 Volunteers, born outside of Ireland, but who gave the ultimate sacrifice for the freedom of Ireland.’
